Ending Violence Against Indigenous Women:
Rethinking Human Rights and Tribal Sovereignty

Thursday, January 25 at 7:30pm
Anthropology Lecture Hall (Room 163)

This lecture explores the persistent nature of violence against Native women and the potential strengths of combining a human rights framing with strengthened tribal sovereignty to combat the violence and hold settler states accountable for it.

Seminar

Friday, January 26 at 12 noon
Anthropology 248

This talk, based on years of research with Indigenous women migrants, explores the role of trauma and emotion in the embodied experience of anthropological field research and knowledge production.

Discussion with Dr. Shannon Speed

Friday, January 26 at 11:00 AM
Anthropology 178

Join us for an informal discussion in which faculty and students are encouraged to ask the JAR Distinguished Lecturer questions about her research. Coffee and bagels will be served.
