Overview: Poem Analysis

The following activity guides students through an analysis of Marjorie Agosín’s Poem “The Arpillerista,” which is reprinted here from “Stitching Truth: Women’s Protest Art in Pinochet’s Chile.”

Agosín’s poem offers an excellent way to bridge literacy with content area studies. Through analyzing the poem, students gain both knowledge of this period of Chilean history, but also experience in practicing literary analysis of poetry. Since students would need at least some understanding of the historical period in order to complete the analysis, this is an activity best done after the unit has already been introduced. It could even be used as an assessment activity at the end of the unit to gauge student knowledge.

1. What is an arpillerista? Agosín defines the arpillerista as “artisan of remains.” What does this mean within the Chilean context?

2. How does an arpillerista “burn” with cold? What does the cold represent? (s. 1 v. 3)

3. What is a shroud? (s. 1 v. 6)

4. Why do you think Agosín uses all of the allusions to fabric? (remnants, trousers, ragged scraps)

5. Who is Philomena? (s. 1 v. 13) Why is she relevant to the poem?

6. Who are the “victorious armies”? (s. 2 v. 7)

7. What does it mean to “bring the dead back to life” in the context of the arpilleras? (s. 2 v. 9)
The Arpillerista

The arpillerista,
artisan of remains burns with rage and cold as she tenderly picks through the remnants of her dead, salvages the shroud of her husband the trousers left after the absences submerges herself in cloth of foaming, silent blood and though she is fragile she grows large, sovereign over her adobe hut, her ragged scraps and determined to tell her story truer than the tale woven by her sister Philomena.
Disruptive and beautiful she puts together her flayed remnants like a greenish forgotten skin and with her disguised thimble hidden in the pocket of her modest apron and her harmless needle she conjures up victorious armies embroiders humble people smiling, become triumphant brings the dead back to life fabricates water, bell towers, schools, dining rooms giant suns and the Cordillera of the Andes peaks opening like portals of this splendid city.

—

Marjorie Agosín
Scraps of Life: Chilean Arpilleras